

UCL Bartlett School of Planning

- Lecturer in Urban Design / Planning
- Lecturer in Sustainable Development

The Bartlett School of Planning at UCL is a research-led planning school with an international reputation offering innovative planning and built environment teaching programmes at both undergraduate and postgraduate levels. The School is now in a position to make a number of major new appointments to further strengthen its academic team. These begin with a new lecturer in urban design / planning (ref: 1146172) and a new lecturer in sustainable development (ref: 1146183). The successful applicants will be expected to contribute to developing the School's research profile through publications of an international standard, and through attracting and undertaking funded research projects. They will also be expected to make a contribution to the School's teaching programmes, demonstrate an established research record and have a PhD in Planning or a related field. Salary will be on the UCL Grade 7 scale (£35,415 to £38,441 including London Allowance).

The Bartlett School of Planning offers a friendly, supportive and dynamic work environment, based in Bloomsbury in the heart of London.
