RMIT is a global university of technology based in Melbourne, with a commitment to and reputation for high quality professional and vocational education and research engaged with industry and community.

RMIT offers great employee benefits such as flexible, family-friendly policies; discounted public transport tickets; subsidised gym membership; onsite childcare facilities (subject to availability); additional holidays; salary packaging initiatives and a generous superannuation scheme.

A position for a Postdoctoral Research Fellow is available within RMIT University's School of Architecture and Design. You will work alongside Dr Quentin Stevens in connection with a major ARC-funded project exploring the design and public perception of contemporary memorials and other public artworks.

The post would suit someone with a PhD in open space design, human-environment relations, urban geography, and/or public art policy. Experience in the publication of academic research is desirable. The post is research-only and is available full-time for four years.

All applicants are required to provide a separate statement addressing the key selection criteria (see PD) in addition to providing a resume and covering letter.

To view a position description and apply please visit www.rmit.edu.au/yourcareer or for further information please contact Assoc. Prof. Quentin Stevens on +61 3 9925 8361. Applications close 21st November 2010.

RMIT is an equal opportunity employer and encourages applications from all sectors of the community. Please note that applications will be reviewed after the close date.
